Dear Dr. Grayson

First off, the news you've been very patiently waiting for: your lecture and interview will appear in Audio-Digest General Practice, Volume 6, number 7, to be published February 14, 1958. Your lecture will thus be heard by over five thousand doctors who receive Audio-Digest each month.

As you suggested in your tape-letter, we did make very good use of the original copy of the Loida interview. Not only did we improve the fidelity, but I included more of the interview, dealing with the patient's initial symptomatology.

So far, so good. The unfortunate part is that I could not use the additional material you sent for inclusion in the lecture. It had been recorded with more treble and with more volume than the rest of the lecture. Realizing that it was extremely interesting material, I even tried duplicating the added material, correcting for volume and tone. But when I spliced it in to the body of the lecture, the tonal differences detracted from the interest of the lecture. I'm sorry about this, not only from your viewpoint, but from the aspect that the additional material would have been very useful to our subscribers. However, when you hear GP-7, I think you'll agree that there remains a very interesting lecture, for which we would like to thank you again.

Sincerely
